Washington started off with a show of activity, but Connie Mack, from the players' bench, breathed a hypnotic wave across the grounds, and throughout the remainder of the exhibition the Schmelzites were, for the most part, like inanimate ob-

In their half of the first the Pirates easily tied the score. Donovan took first, Stenzel was hit, and both moved up when Beckley sacrificed. Donovan scored when Crooks dropped Smith's high fly back of second, and Stenzel crossed the plate on Coogan's fumble of an easy bounder from Bierbauer's bat. In the fourth Bierbauer singled to left, and Clingman followed with a little one to the pitcher, who threw to second, but Coogan muffed, and both runners were safe. Clingman sacrificed; Sugden hit to Coogan, who fumbled, and then threw wild, Bierbauer scoring. Clingman trotted home when Hart singled, and both scored on Donovan's single. Stocksdale kept up the fun by hitting Stenzel, when Beckley hit to first, advancing his two predecessors. Smith drove to left, permitting cessors. One more piratical score was made in the sixth. Donovan hit to right, and scored on Beckley's three-bagger. In the eighth a quintet was added on hits by Hart, Don-ovan, Stenzel Beckley, and an error by Coogan.

The final pair of runs for Washington were also made in the eighth or Coorne's pick-up and throw to home by Crooks. The work of Coogan at short was a disappoint-ment to the spectators, who had been promised something different. Score: AFFAIRS IN ALEXANDRIA

He ran across a man named Charles Watkins, who furnished the information, after which Watkins took advantage of his being a stranger and proceeded to show him the town. The two got pretty well loaded. They went to the Hotel Borans, on the corner of Prince and Royal streets, in the afternoon, where Nicols said he wanted to rest. They were given a room, when the stranger took off all of his clothes except his vest, in the inside pocket of which was about $21. The vest was buttoned up tight around him. When he went to sleep Watkins was in the room, and when he woke up Watkins was gone, as was every cent he had in his pockets, and his vest was wide open. The matter was reported to the police this morning, and it is being investigated.

Watkins, it will be remembered, was fined $5 by the mayor several weeks ago for badly treating his wife.

Mrs. Borans, the hotel keeper, says no one went into the room except Watkins. LOST A POORLY PLAYED GAME.

The Senators Disappointed a Large Number at National Park. Wearing new and jaunty cops of black, the Washington Base Ball Club appeared before 5,000 persons at National Park yesterday afternoon, having just returned from its first western trip of the season. A coterie of young and athletic-looking men, bearing "Pittsburg" across the front of their shirts, among others, were in attendance, and seemed to have lots of fun with the local nine.

It being ladies' day, the attendance was larger than it would otherwise have been, and the enthusiasm was great when Selbach, the first man up, hit to Bierbauer, and beat the ball to first. Joyce, who followed, promptly lifted the sphere to somewhere in the vicinity of Le Droit Park, and the concourse almost burst with joy. That was all the home team could do, however, until the eighth, when the hypnotic influence weakened just a little. In their half of the first the Pirates easily tied the score. Donovan took first,

by retiring at first.

One more piratical score was made in the sixth. Donovan hit to right, and scored on Beckley's three-bagger. In the eighth a quintet was added on hits by Hart, Donovan, Stenzel Beckley, and an error by Coogan.

The final pair of runs for Washington were also made in the eighth on Coogan's hit to center, a short passed ball, Abbey's two-bagger, a sacrifice by Stocksdale and a double by Joyce.

Washington had opportunities to score in several other innings, but failed to take advantage of them. The game was tiresome throughout, the only relief being two good catches by Selbach and a creditable
